Introduction

The NHS BME Network was launched on 4 June 2010, to be an "independent and effective voice for BME people to ensure the NHS delivers on its statutory duties concerning race equality" and there is much work for us to do to ensure that we deliver on our key aims and objectives.

In his key note speech on "The Big Society" David Cameron states: "It's about liberation-the biggest, most dramatic redistribution of power from elites in Whitehall to the man and woman on the street". We have spent the past two years assessing the health climate for BME staff, patients service users and clients and have shown that we have been on the receiving end of a raw deal. Furthermore, all the available evidence to date suggests that in the new healthcare climate things are more likely to deteriorate rather than improve for BME people.

As the lead commissioner of healthcare services, GPs in partnership with local authorities, will need to determine what services are required to meet the needs of BME communities and provide a mechanism to effectively address ethnic health inequalities. However, the evidence shows that GPs are confused about how much responsibility they will actually have for Equality and Diversity and they openly admit they do not have the skills and knowledge to deliver on this important agenda.

By contrast the Equality Delivery System (EDS) will now become the main "tool" by which NHS organisations are charged with delivering Equality and Diversity and yet for it to be effective NHS organisations will have to show they have pro-actively engaged and consulted BME staff and BME communities a task they have failed to achieve to date. Furthermore, the Public Sector Equality Duty published more recently appears to be at odds with the requirements of the EDS given for example organisations are no longer required to show how they have used public engagement to make decisions regarding Equality and Diversity or how they intend to monitor progress against their objectives.

It is time for us to show how we intend to make the difference. It is time for "The Big Move", we owe it to both this and the next generation of BME people. The main aim and objective of this conference is for us to, debate, plan and shape how "The Big Move" can and will be achieved.

Workshops

Workshop 1

Will the Equality Delivery System (EDS) Deliver Race Equality?

This workshop will debate whether the EDS is “fit for purpose” concerning the delivery of race equality. It is purported that the EDS will require the involvement of BME people (staff and patients) and that BME people will need to be empowered to undertake this role. However, what does this mean in reality given past failures?. What changes have taken place in the NHS to make outcome of race equality any different this time round?. What should happen next?. This workshop provides you with an ideal opportunity to have your say!

Workshop 2

Mental Health and BME Communities - What Next?

The Delivering Race Equality (DRE) five-year action plan for England came to an end in 2010 together with the last publication of the Count me in census. Rather worryingly the overall results of the 2010 census show little change from those reported for previous years. Although the numbers of inpatients overall have fallen since 2005, ethnic differences in rates of admission, detention under the Mental Health Act and seclusion (three of DRE’s 12 goals) have not altered materially since the inception of DRE in 2005.

Whilst it must be accepted that the differences in mental health between ethnic groups is dependent on a number of different factors and therefore more complex than simple the fact that no changes have been observed for the three goals mentioned above clearly indicate failings in the system a fact well recognised by BME communities and yet the establishment would want us to believe otherwise. The government’s new strategy for the future of mental health care “No Health Without Mental Health” aims to tackle the economic, social and environmental determinants and consequences of mental health problems and to improve outcomes and reduce inequalities.

The debate will focus on whether this strategy can indeed deliver mental health for our BME communities and what BME communities need to do to change the status quo.

Please Note: Allocations will be made on a first come first serve basis given the restriction on numbers for the venue accommodation.
